Resolution 1997-1 concerns steps being taken to improve the humaneness of aboriginal whaling operations. Resolution 2001-2 encourages all Contracting Governments to provide appropriate technical assistance to reduce time to unconsciousness and death in all whaling operations.

4.1. Reports from Contracting Governments4.2. Report of Whale Welfare and Ethics Workshop

At IWC/62 in 2010 the UK proposed to hold a Welfare and Ethics workshop to collate knowledge on the current status of animal welfare science and management policies globally and allow expert discussion and analysis of such information. The UK will present a report from the workshop to IWC/63.

The workshop, held 22-23 March, in Cornwall brought together international experts in animal welfare science, policy and legislation, animal ethics, animal research and wild animal welfare, and participants received and discussed presentations reviewing the welfare implications of whale research, whale watching, whaling, entanglements and ship strikes.

The workshop produced a series of conclusions focussed on animal welfare management of intentional human-whale interactions, namely: the use of cetaceans in scientific research; killing and euthanasia of cetaceans and whale watching. The workshop further agreed a series of recommendations to the IWC.

5. WELFARE ISSUES ASSOCIATED WITH THE ENTANGLEMENT OF LARGE WHALES

An IWC workshop on welfare issues associated with the entanglement of large whales was held in April 2010 in Maui, Hawaii and an account of the findings of the workshop was provided to IWC 62 in 2010. This item allows opportunity to receive progress reports related to the workshop's recommendations and any other follow up work arising.
